Half-Way!

Have you forgotten where we stood
Between the lights, that night of Spring,
The river rolling to the flood,
So sad the birds, they dared not sing?
No love was ever dream'd like this,
Beneath the shadows of the park,
Between a whisper and a kiss,
Between the daylight and the dark!

There had been trouble—this was rest;
There had been passion—this was peace:
The sunset dying in the west
Made Nature sigh and whispers cease.
I only felt what I had found,
You only knew what I would say;
But nothing broke the peace profound
Between the darkness and the day!

How will it end? I cannot tell;
I asked it many months ago,
Before the leaves of Autumn fell,
And chang'd to Winter's waste of snow.
Yet we stand watching at the gate
Of summer time for promise—hark!
No love, 'tis nothing! we must wait
Between the daylight and the dark!

A BITTER CUP.

Mr. Martin had just come in to tea. It was one of those sultry summer evenings when the leaves hang stirlessly on the trees, and the dull electric fires blaze along the east, foreboders of storm.

It had been very hot all day, the farm-hands had lagged at their work on the lowland meadow, and all the world's wheels seemed to revolve as if hey were weighted. Mr. Martin was very tired, and, withal, a little cross.

Perhaps Mrs. Martin was tired, too. She, poor soul, had been up since four o'clock in the morning. She had washed, taken care of four cows' milk, prepared three meals for the hungry farm hands, been up in the quarry woods to search for a family of adventurous young turkey-chicks, soothed the sorrows of a teething baby, and mended up the suit of clothes which Betsey Blim, the tailoress, had declared "not worth a needleful o' thread!" because Thomas, her husband, had said that "willful waste was woful want," and that there was a deal of wear in the suit yet, if only there was a stitch taken here and there.

But her cheek was pink and her eyes sparkling when Thomas came in, for all the heaviness in her heart and the dull pain in her back, for little Esther had come home from boarding-school.

Esther, the youngest sister of all, the darling of the family circle from which Mrs. Martin came—the pet for whom they all had scraped and pinched so that she, at least, might have a "Boston education."

And Esther sat in the window-seat, grown into a blooming young woman, with bronze-brown hair lying in fluffy masses over her fair forehead, porcelain-blue eyes, and a dress all trimmed with ribbon bows,

"Look, Thomas!" cried Mrs. Martin, excitedly: "it's Essie! Essie come home two days before we expected her!"

"Yes, I see," said Mr. Martin, in the cold, measured tones which always dampened his wife's enthusiasm like so many drops of freezing water. "How do you do, Esther? Ruth, what are you putting cold chicken on the table for? Corned-beef is plenty, I am sure. You had a great deal better save the chicken for the men's breakfast. Working folks have hearty appetites."

"Esther is fond of cold chicken," whispered Mrs. Martin. "And—"

"No one need want anything better than good corned-beef," judiciously pronounced Mr. Martin, "Put the chicken back into the pantry, and the apple jelly with it. Good stewed gooseberries are relish enough for anybody. We must economize in little things as well as large ones, if we don't want to end our days in the poorhouse."

And Mrs. Martin sorrowfully obeyed, while Esther watched her brother-in-law with large, grave eyes, betokening inward surprise.

At the end of a week, Mr. Martin addressed his sister-in-law with serious purpose.

"Well, Esther," said he, "you've been here a week now."

"Yes," said Essie, "I've been here a week."

"A week is a good long visit," remarked Mr. Martin.

"It's long enough for some things," said Essie.

"Mrs. Martin thinks she would like to have you stay," went on Mr. Martin, after a puzzled glance at the blue, shining eyes. "And although, of course, every one adds to the expense in a family like this, I've no objections to giving you a home, provided you are willing to earn it by hard work. And—"

"Stop!" cried Essie, jumping up, "I haven't asked you for a home yet. And I don't mean to. And you are only making me the offer because Doctor Dorlan says Ruth will break down unless she has a strong maid-servant to help her with the housework. But there is no money that would hire me to make myself such a drudge as poor Ruth is."

"Hoity-toity!" said Mr. Martin. "Young woman, you don't consider who you are talking to."

"Yes, I do," said Essie, with emphasis. "To a Bluebeard, to a stock, a stone, a man who is grinding his wife's life out on the pitiless wheel of money-making. No, I wouldn't live as Ruth does, not if you would put me in a palace!"

Mr. Martin grew green and saffron by turns.

"Humph!" said he. "Fine ideas you have got at this fashionable boarding-school of yours. Well, if you don't like my offer, you're not obliged to accept it. Be a fine lady, if you please, and see where it will land you."

By way of answer, Essie marched out of the room with all the dignity of a royal princess. She only stopped in the kitchen long enough to kiss Ruth, who was in the midst of a baking.

"Poor darling," said she, "How I wish I could carry you off with me. For stay, I won't!"

"Life is hard work, Essie," said Mrs. Martin, beginning to cry, in spite of herself; "and it's a woman's duty to help her husband."

'And I mean to help mine—when I have one," said Essie, blushing brightly. "But not by wearing myself out."

Mr. Martin shook his head.

"If Stephen Smith is foolish enough to marry that saucy gipsy, she'll lead him a pretty life," said he. "I wonder if she expects to sit on a satin sofa all her days, with a rose in her hand, and her hair frizzled, in that preposterous fashion, all over her eyes? But I warn 'em, they need never come to me for help! Esther has treated me with too much insolence for me ever to receive her again,"

"I am sure she did not mean anything," said Mrs. Martin, apologetically.

"Well, then, her words belied her meaning," remarked Thomas Martin, grimly compressing his lips.

But Stephen Smith was apparently undaunted by the possibilities of ruin predicted by Farmer Martin, for he married Esther and went to the city to live, within three months.

"I give 'em just a year to come back here and eat humble pie!" said Martin, vindictively.

"Oh, Thomas; don't talk so!" said his wife. "One would think you would be glad to have some evil befall them!"

"And so I should," said Martin, viciously grinding his teeth together. "That girl needs a lot of humbling, and I hope she'll get it."

Three years afterward there came one of those terrible droughts that undo a farmer's life-work in a season, and sweep away his prospects as an autumn wind sweeps away a sere forest. The cattle died, a pestilence broke out among the flock of sheep, which Thomas Martin had just bought; a high wind blew his best barn over, and disaster stared him in the face on every side.

"It's no use talking," said he. "I cannot meet this year's interest on the mortgage. The place will have to go."

"Oh, Thomas!" groaned Mrs. Martin, who, poor soul, now lay all day on a hard wooden lounge, and groaned to see how wofully she was needed at the helm.

"I can't help it," said Martin. "Everything is against me."

"It's only five hundred dollars," said Mrs. Martin. "You might borrow it."

"Who'd lend to me, I'd like to know?" said Martin, remembering with a sigh how he had hardened his own face against every humble suppliant in the golden days of his prosperity.

"There's Esther's husband," suggested Ruth. "I've heard that he's doing well in Boston. And, after all, Esther's my own sister."

Mr. Martin's features contracted into a hideous grimace. Of all the bitter cups which circumstances had held to his lips of late this was the bitterest.

But it had to be swallowed. There was no help for it.

"I didn't suppose Smith's folks lived as genteel as this," said he to himself, as a neat maid led him across an octagonal vestibule, floored with black and red marble, and fragrant with flowers, under the golden fringe of an antique portiere, into a large, tastefully-furnished room, where the singing birds, the open piano, the low satin sofa all betokened no lack of money.

Yes—Mr. Smith was at home. He had not yet gone to the store, and presently he came in, waving welcomes to the man who had married Essie's sister.

"Lend you a thousand dollars?" said he. "Of course we can lend you a thousand dollars. What is money for if not to help each other with. Oh, yes. We've a snug little sum laid up in the bank, and we live very comfortably. My business? Yes, it's tolerable, but it never got us all these things," glancing at the soft arabesques of the carpet, the graceful folds of the crimson silk curtains, and the easel filled with proof engravings. "That is my wife's doing."

"Eh?" said Mr. Martin, staring around him.

"Yes," said Smith, with a certain, quiet satisfaction. "Essie is an artist, you know—a designer. She invents patterns for the paper-hangers and upholsterers. They are glad to pay her fifty dollars a week."

"Fifty dollars a week!" exclaimed Thomas Martin. "Why that's more—fifty dollars is, I mean—than poor Ruth made by all her poultry for a year. Well, I never!"

In all his life he had never respected Essie as he respected her now.

"She has money laid up," said Stephen Smith. "And if she's the girl I think she is, she won't grudge it to help her sister's husband in a pinch."

Gall and bitterness—gall and bitterness! But, thought poor Martin, with a sigh, how was Stephen to know all that was come and gone?

Essie's light step, on the passageway, sounded at this instant; and she came in, dressed in a picturesque brown linen blouse; her hair still shading her forehead, like a fringe of floss silk, after the old, graceful fashion.

"Yes," she said brightly, when her brother-in-law's errand was stated to her; "Of course you shall have it. I owe you as much as that, I think, Thomas, were it only to erase from your memory that last scene of our parting. How defiant and insolent it was, to-be-sure!" and she laughed the sweetest of mellow laughter. "But I insist upon it still, that my theory was correct; a woman can work, without becoming a drudge."

"Perhaps she can," slowly and unwillingly admitted Thomas Martin—"perhaps she can! But it didn't use to be so, in my mother's days."

And he sighed to think of poor Ruth, broken down in the meridian of her days, by the cruel necessities that drive the wife of an American farmer to her doom. Was it his own fault? Perhaps it was.

Essie's thousand loan was the straw which saved him from figurative drowning. He paid the interest, bought a new flock of merino sheep, and weathered the storm.

And the next year when Essie came to the farm to assist her sister, for the first time she found Ruth sitting on the piazza, and watching the little lambs play in the sunshine with listless, heavy eyes.

"Yes," said Ruth, "I can't work any more. But Thomas is very kind. He don't grudge the hired girl's wages, and he is always saying he wished he had taken more care of me in the old times. But it's too late now. You were right, Essie, when you said you wouldn't stay on here, and help with the housework."

"Yes," said Essie, fondling the thin hand, which lay on the arm of the rocking-chair, "I think I was right."—Helen Forest Graves.

The Viceroy and the Baby.

A characteristic anecdote is related of the late Lord Lawrence, when as the new Viceroy of India, he was returning to the country in which his best years had been passed. He was in bad spirits, partly from sea-sickness; partly from the lack of friends and congenial natures around him, partly from the feeling of the heavy responsibilities which he had assumed in comparatively weak health. A lady was returning to India with her infant child, which she utterly neglected, and the baby took its revenge upon the passengers generally by squalling day and night alike. They complained in no measured language to the authorities, "Steward, throw that baby overboard!" was the cry which came from many a tempest-tossed and sleepless birth. But the nuisance continued unabated. At last the new viceroy, perhaps he saw in the child, half-unconsciously, a slight resemblance to his lost Bertie, gave it a large share of his attention, and would take it for hours together on his knee, showing it his watch and anything that would amuse it. The child took to him, as he to it, and to the great relief of the passengers was always quiet in his presence. "Why do you take such notice of that child?" Asked one of them. "Why, to tell you the truth," said the viceroy, "that child is the only being in the ship who I can feel quite sure does not want to get anything out of me, and so I take pleasure in its society." How much of the kindliness and simplicity of a great nature is revealed by this simple story.

The camphor tree has recently been introduced into California and promises well. It resembles the laurel somewhat. It grows well all along the coast, and one tree at Sacramento has already attained a height of thirty feet. It is easily propagated from seed or cuttings. A non-conductor of electricity has yet to be found, for all substances hitherto discovered are conductors of the force under certain known conditions, but those which offer a great resistance to it serve the purpose of non-conductors in practice, although they may all be either classed as good or bad conductors. A Boy's Sermon that Staid By.

It was the first effort he had ever made to speak in public. It was in a union praise meeting, following a great revival, in a college town. The boy, blushing and agitated, yet, wishing to add his word of advice and thanksgiving, began abruptly:

"My dear brothers and sisters, I hope you will all take hold; and when you get hold, keep hold."

The youth was so confused, that he repeated the same words over and over, apparently unable to stop, or to catch a new sentence. Some of the young people, who had religion, but were not old enough to have pity or consideration, began to laugh, when a big hearted man (none other than Brother Ben. Bristow, of Covington), struck out with the always appropriate ejaculation, "Thank God!" and then, with that great melodious voice of his, began the hymn—"Am I a soldier of the Cross?"

Pending this inquiry the youthful disciple sank, red and perspiring, into his seat.

I am uncertain whether any honest effort is fruitless. That poor lad thought, no doubt, that that was a failure. I have often wondered whether he ever tried it again—whether he did "keep hold." The talk of the college professors and the ministers of the evangelical churches assembled in that union meeting have faded from my remembrance entirely, but the poor boy's wretched exhortation remains at least in one heart.

Selecting a Horse.

The Turf, Field and Farm, than which there is no better authority on the subject says: In buying a horse, first look at his head and eyes for signs of intelligence, temper, courage and honesty. If bad qualities predominate in a horse, education only serves to enlarge and intensify them. The head is the indicator of disposition. A square muzzle, with large nostrils, evidences an ample breathing apparatus and lung power. Next, see that he is well under the jowl, with jaw-bones broad and wide apart under the throttle. Breadth and fullness between ears and eyes are always desirable. The eyes should be full and hazel in color, ears small and thin and thrown well forward. The horse that turns his ears back every now and then is not to be trusted. He is either a biter or a kicker, and is sure to be vicious in other respects, and, being naturally vicious, can never be trained to do anything well, and so a horse with a rounding nose, tapering forehead, and a broad, full face below the eyes is always treacherous and not to be depended on. Avoid the long-legged, stilted animal—always choosing one with a short, straight back and rump, withers high and shoulders sloping, well set back, and with a good depth of chest, fore legs short, hind legs straight, with low down hock, short pastern joints, and a round mulish-shaped foot.

BABY.

He Went Down Town With Grandpa, but Won't Go Any More.

Grandpa loved the baby. The baby is three years old, with the prettiest big blue eyes, the plumpest, reddest, cheeks, the dearest, dimpled mouth, and the cunningest ways in the world. Baby has sturdy little legs, and restless, strong little arms, and is an example of perpetual motion. Baby's grandpa accompanied him on various walks, but grandpa's ambition was to take baby down to the store, where the boys could see what a phenomenal child he is, and what cunning ways he has. One morning grandpa dressed baby up, and when he started away with grandpa he looked, with his wavy golden hair, bright eyes, and little brown cloak, like one of Kate Greenway's creations imbued with life. When the passengers in the car smiled at baby and remarked how sweet he was, grandpa was happy, and chuckled as he thought of the enjoyment of having baby with him at the store. Once at the store, baby was the centre of an admiring crowd of grandpa's business companions. Baby was shy at first, and one fat fist was pushed into the little mouth, while baby's eyes were cast upon the floor. Pretty soon, though, baby regained his usual spirits and started on a tour of investigation. His first venture was to pull over a lot of ledgers and account-books that had been undergoing an investigation, and on top of this pile he poured the contents of a big bottle of violet ink. Pursuing his investigations further, baby found himself in the office where the brightly varnished safe, with its impossible landscapes, at once attracted his attention. The heavy iron door was closed, and baby, by standing on a chair, could just reach the combination knob, the brightness of which had caught his eye. He played with the pretty knob, turning it round and round ever so many times, and laughing to himself. But the man who came to open the safe, and who was in a dreadful hurry, didn't laugh, for the lock had been worked for years on a part of the combination and baby had destroyed it completely, and three hours were required to find it again. Out in a back room baby found a hammer and some tacks, and filled some new desks full of pretty tin tacks. Then following the promptings of his busy little mind he pulled a piece of string to see what was on the other end of it. There was a mantel ornament belonging to one of the boys on the other end, and when the baby pulled the ornament tipped over and was shattered. Baby was frightened at the muss he had made, and hid himself in a box that stood on end near the door, and that had been used to hold soft coal during the winter. Grandpa found him there, but in what a plight! His little face and hands and his beautiful white dress were begrimed with the nasty coal-dust. Grandpa brushed him off and washed his face and hands, and made him somewhat presentable, after which he set him down in a big chair, and told him to set still. Baby sat still about a minute and then slid down out of the chair, and wandered away into the back room, where he suddenly spied a little dog curled up asleep on the top of a box. Baby stood on his toes, got a good grip on doggy's tail, and pulled. The dog woke up. And the next minute baby's little legs were working for dear life as he fled towards grandpa's quarters. Grandpa met him, kicked the dog, and quieted baby, tried to patch up the places in baby's dress where the dog's teeth had made ragged rents, and began to club himself for bringing baby down town. Finally baby capped the climax by upsetting on himself a can of lard oil, and grandpa quit work for the rest of the day-wrapped the baby in thick brown paper, tied a string around him and took him home. It will be some time before grandpa will take his pet down town with him again. Baby had a good time, though.

The Great Pork Speculator.

P. D. Armour is of sturdy Scotch Presbyterian stock. He was born in one of the central counties of New York, on a farm among the hills. It was the highest ambition of his boyhood days to earn money enough to buy the farm adjoining his father's. When the gold fever broke out he was still a mere stripling; but, full of youthful enthusiasm, he started for California, driving a wagon across the plains and mountains. He remained there three or four years, and in that time saved a few thousand dollars. He had cash enough to buy that farm and settle down. He had no sooner reached home than he experienced a sudden revulsion of feeling. The streets of the village looked narrow, cramped and dull; the house appeared mean and dingy. He only remained on the farm two or three days, and then betook himself to Cincinnati Later he drifted to Milwaukee, and at the close of the war he sold a great lot of pork at $40 a barrel, and bought it again at $18 to $19, realizing a profit of about a million. To-day he ranks as the wealthiest man in Chicago, being rated by those who know something of his business at $25,000,000 or $30,000,000. His transactions are colossal. His firm employs between 5,000 and 6,000 men, and on his pay rolls are about fifty men who recieve salaries of $5,000 and over. He is not yet fifty-five years of age.

MASSACRE OF THE CANINES.

Remorseless Waves Engulf the Dogs Who Have no Homes.—Scenes at the New York Pound.

A New York reporter describes the method by which the unmuzzled dogs caught in the streets are killed at the pound, on the East river. Ninety-two dogs were disposed of on the day of the reporter's visit. During the forenoon a number of people called at the pound to claim their animals lost the night before while dissipating on the streets. While the weather was yet in that uncertain state between a heavy downpour of driving rain and a separation of the clouds for the admission of sunshine, an old gentleman in a linen duster and a tall hat, with a blue gingham umbrella in his hand, was descried by the keeper peering anxiously over the outer wall. When questioned he admitted that he was in search of "Frank," who had mysteriously disappeared from home. It required a good deal of persuasion to induce the old gentleman to enter the door over whose portals might be appropriately inscribed, "Who enters here leaves hope behind." Once inside, he kept very close to the side of the keeper and was very reluctant to survey the pens in which a number of restless and protesting dogs were confined. Finally, when half-way through the yard, he recognized his pet spitz shut up with half a dozen ragged and dissipated-looking canines, among whom he was lolling in utter ignorance of the fate he was barely escaping. He sprang about the pen in great delight when he saw his master, and when the latter had paid the $3 necessary for his redemption, he accompanied him up the street with his tail elevated in triumph at the successful rescue.

While a dozen or more were saved from an unhappy fate by thoughtful masters, the others did not fare so well. About two o'clock in the afternoon a large iron cage four feet square was wheeled into the inclosure, and the door unlocked. A number of dogs who had watched the proceedings with tongues protruding through the bars of the pens evidently began to suspect the approach of a violent death, for they set up a lugubrious howling, and communicated their terror to their companions. In an instant the yard resounded with weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. A black and white spitz was first seized by the legs and thrust into the cage, lamenting the error of his ways at the top of his voice. A poodle followed him with piteous yelling protests, and then half a hundred curs of mongrel breed were sent to join their company. The spitz seemed to resent his forced companionship, and engaged at once in a pitched battle with a big yellow dog, whom he drove into a corner, where he licked his wounds and howled dismally for succor.

When the cage was filled it was wheeled along a short railroad track to the water's edge, where it was attached to a large crane. An executioner stood at the crank, and when the signal was given, he let go his hold and stepped back upon the platform. The cage swung out over the water and descended amid yells of rage, cries of fear and barks of derision. As it began to sink the dogs fought desperately for the upper places, and it disappeared with the disreputable spitz at the top of the cage, battling fiercely with a black-and-tan who disputed his supremacy. A choked wail floated over the white-capped waves, and the checkered career of the unfortunate canines came to a sudden and unexpected termination at the bottom of the East river, amid the sea-weed, pebbles and fishes.

After the lapse of a few minutes the cage was raised and the wet, limp bodies thrown into a waiting cart. The unhappy dogs who had witnessed the departure of their comrades from their pens in the yard were then taken out and treated to a similar exit. One of these that wore a huge Spinola collar snapped viciously at every dog as he was put into the cage. Another went at his antagonist savagely, and they sank beneath the restless waters locked in a fierce and passionate embrace. When the pens had been emptied the carcasses were taken to Barren island where they will be boiled down and converted into soap and phosphate.

To a Daisy.

Wee, little rimless wheel of fate,
With silver spokes and hub of yellow
What gentle girl, in accents mellow,
Has sought your aid to find a mate?

Who snapt your slender spokes apart,
Each one some dear acquaintance naming?
And who was he—the loved one, claiming
The choicest chamber in her heart?

O tiny hub of golden hue,
Kist by her fingers' tender pressing,
Still yet, methinks, she's vainly guessing
If what you prophesied were true.

You died between her finger tips,
Sweet gypsy maid of wisdom magic;
Pray, is it worth a death so tragic
To hear the music of her lips?

Trichinæ.

This word—the plural of trichina, has its accent on the second syllable. It is from a Greek word meaning "hair" and is the name of the hair-like worms sometimes found in the human muscles. The word "spiralis" is generally attached to it, and refers to the manner in which the parasite lies curled up in his tiny capsule.

When fully grown, it would take eighteen of the males, placed end to end, to make an inch. The disease to which they give rise—at first often mistaken for muscular rheumatism—i called trichiniasis, sometimes trichiniasis.

It was not until 1835 that the parasite was found in man. During the next twenty-five years it was proved that there was a connection between the disease in man and that of a hog; and in 1867 the parasite was found in the muscles of the latter. Whence the hog has derived it is an unsettled question.

As long as the hog lives the parasite remains dormant in the animal, like the chrysalis of the butterfly. But when the hog's flesh is eaten, the tiny capsules then are dissolved by the digestive juices, and trichinae are set free.

A single meal may introduce many thousands of them—over a million, says one writer—into the stomach. Thus introduced they live from five to six weeks in the intestines, each one producing meanwhile a brood of at least one thousand five hundred. The latter soon migrate towards the muscles, following the course of the blood-vessels and nerves, and reaching their goal about the tenth day.

Here, in five or six months, they pass into a sort of chrysalis condition, to be freed from it only by the gastric juices of some other being. Similar migrations may follow, wave after wave More or less, however, are swept out of the intestines, possibly to find their way back to their ancestral home in the swine.

The trichinæ have been found in every land. They have also been detected in the cat, dog, rabbit, rat, mouse, marmot, the wild hog of Europe, and even in the hippopotamus.—Youth's Companion.

The Republican State Convention.

The republicans of the state had their convention at Harrisburg last Wednesday. The managers had everything in splendid working order and the whole business of nominating candidates, constructing a platform and appointing a state committee was all done in a day. It was a love feast between the stalwarts and independents and all is again lovely between the two wings of of the party so recently engaged in a fierce warfare. Jerome B. Niles, of Tioga county, was nominated for Auditor General, on the fifth ballot, and William Livesey, of Allegheny county, for State Treasurer, on the sixth ballot. Both are men of good repute and fitness personally.

The platform consists of eleven planks, one "whereas" and one resolution. It is truly a strange mixture of truth, falsehood and duplicity.

The first plank demands a continuance of a system of protection that will develope our industrial pursuits and secure adequate wages to labor, and protests against all attempts to reduce the tariff below a level that will accomplish these results. This is eminently right and proper—just what every American citizen not tinctured with the baneful heresay of free trade will squarely endorse.

The other planks are nearly all in the threadbare regulation style of platitudes and contradictions which will deceive nobody. The twaddle about civil service reform and economy in the administration of the state and national governments is the same hollow, insincere stuff that the people are used to hearing these many years. It is the same cheap talk over and over again. The same professions and the same lack of practice that has marked republican administrations for several decades.

The attempt of the convention to saddle the responsibility of the failure to apportion the state into legislative, senatorial, congressional and judicial districts, on the democrats of the house, is shameful in the extreme, in the light of the action of the stalwart senate. It is the old stop-thief game of a set of men who wish to cover their own unrighteous acts by laying the blame on those who faithfully tried to do their duty. The attempt will fail utterly and ignobly.

A Philadelphia paper gives the startling news that several well defined cases of Asiatic cholera have appeared in London. The news lacks confirmation.

No Apportionment.

The last lingering hope that the legislature will pass reasonably fair apportionment bills is fast vanishing. It seems in fact as if our law makers at Harrisburg would adjourn without having done a single act for which they were called in extra session, and simply because the stalwart majority of the senate, under the leadership of Cooper, Reyburn and others, are lost to all sense of fairness and justice in adjusting congressional, senatorial and legislative districts so as to give each party an equitable representation according to the relative vote cast for President in 1880.

The democratic house has done its duty fully. It has conceded all it can concede—even more than it should have conceded, and has already appointed a second conference committe, to meet a similar committee of the senate. But the senate refuses to appoint a second committee—refuses to fulfill its sworn constitutional duty. Refuses anything and everything except the infamous McCracken gerrymander. The democratic house cannot and will not accept. It would be false to its high trust it it did.

If the stalwarts will not listen to reason a democratic congress may refuse admission to the entire Pennsylvania delegation. It would be entirely justifiable to do so on strictly constitutional grounds, else plain English means nothing.

The Turning Point for '84.

If the Democrats can carry New York, New Jersey and Ohio this year, the result will be generally regarded as a decision of the Presidential contest in their favor. If they should also capture Pennsylvania this would end the matter.

What is the outlook for the year in these four States? The New York Republicans are trying to compromise their long standing controversies, but a united Democracy, with a good ticket, would undoubtedly be successful. The election of a Democratic Governor in New Jersey by a handsome majority is conceded by candid Republicans.

In Ohio the tide is setting in favor of the Democrats; indeed, with their excellent ticket and platform, their success is pretty certain. If Ohio goes Democratic in October, New York and New Jersey will follow in its wake with large majorities in November, while the Republicans of Pennsylvania, weakened by dissensions, may perhaps share the fate of their brethren in Ohio.

These are victories worth fighting for. The Democrats of these four States have an opportunity this fall to determine the great national struggle of 1884.—N. Y. Sun.

Ex-Gov. Curtin on Trade Dollars.

From the Lewisburg Journal.

The following letter received last week by Mr. I. C. Harvey, of our borough, from Ex-Governor Curtin shows that our member of Congress is right on the trade dollar question:

BELLEFONTE, Pa, July 4, 1883.

My dear sir:

I received your letter this morning.

If the Secretary of the Treasury has the authority he will, I hope, exercise it and exchange the legal silver dollar for the trade dollar. If he has not the authority, I have no doubt Congress will promptly give it to him and thus as far as possible relieve the people from great injustice, and my advocacy will be zealously given to any measure which will accomplish that purpose.

The banks will hold the trade dollars in their vaults until Congress meets and so indeed will persons of large means and able to hold and await governmental action; but most unhappily the loss will fall upon the poor that are not able to hold the trade dollars in their possession, and that condition invites speculation.

If it were possible to have the trade dollar taken by railroad companies, banks and persons in large business by by a general understanding to hold the money until Congress can act, it would relieve the people, arrest individual speculation and hasten the action of Congress.

Yours truly,

A. G. CURTIN.

A severe storm again swept over large portions of Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Iowa, last Saturday, doing vast damages to property, but happily only a few lives were lost. Near Browning, Mo., a train was blown off the track. At Windsor, Mo., a circus and menagerie was torn to pieces and some of the animals escaped. Lengthy accounts are given of damages to churches and other buildings, crops, fences, trees and railroads in many sections of the states named as well as Nebraska and Indiana.

A Blow to the Lottery Swindle.

Postmaster General Gresham has given a fresh illustration of his integrity and courage by his final decision rejecting all lottery circulars and letters from the mails. It is a crushing blow to a public robbery that has grown to millions annually, and that not only robbed but demoralized industry wherever it obtained a footing. The battle has long been waged to defeat the plain act of Congress. Lottery managers had hundreds of thousands to spend to tempt politicians, weaken power, subsidize newspapers, and employ the ablest counsel in the country, and the act of 1876, declaring that "no letter or circular concerning lotteries, so-called gift concerts or other similar enterprises offering prizes, shall be carried in the mails," has been practically a dead letter until Postmaster General Gresham has finally decided that the law shall be enforced.—Philadelphia Times.

Any information that leads to the recovery of the cow will be liberally rewarded by

CHARLES C. BELL.

—The glorious millennium is most certainly dawning down at Lewisburg. Just to think of it—Brother Cornelius, the rank, rampart radical editor of the Chronicle sent Brother Whitman, the red hot democratic editor of the Journal, a fine lot of cherries the other day!

—We call the special attention of our readers to the fact that Prof. W. T. Meyer, sells Pianos and Organs for the enterprising firm of Bunnell & Aiken, of Bellefonte. Mr. Meyer is not only an expert in the use of musical instruments but understands their construction and value thoroughly, and is therefore a safe man to buy from. 3t

—The enterprising firm of Dinges, Vonada & Co., at Coburn, have procured a stylish new delivery wagon. We have not seen a finer wagon this long time. The lettering is especially good and reads as follows:

"DINGES, VONADA & CO., PENN'S VALLEY BARGAIN STORE. GENERAL MERCHANDISE GOODS DELIVERED FREE."

—J. A. LIMBERT will carry express and freight goods from Coburn to any point along the route at the following rates: All packages weighing less than 100 pounds, to Millheim, 10 cts., to Aaronsburg, 15 cts., to Woodward, 25 cts. For packages weighing over 100 pounds a proportionate charge will be made. tf

—Our farmers have been very busy for the last week in cutting the rich harvest which Providence has mercifully bestowed upon the people of these fair valleys. We hear but one report, and that is that the grain is well filled and that it stands thickly on the ground—in fact the best harvest the valleys had these many years. Hay is over abundant and corn promises well. There is every prospect for an exceptionally prolific year.

—A stroke of lightning struck the house of Mr. D. H. Rote, in Aaronsburg, on Friday afternoon, shattered the chimney, tore some of the stove pipe, broke a lamp that was standing on a table in the room, ran across the floor cutting the carpet, desended into the cellar by a nail in the floor, struck and melted a mouse trap and was finally lost among some brick work. Mr. Rote was in the room at the time and was so shocked by the stroke that he felt the effects of it for several days.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION.—The undersigned will begin a term of musical instructions on the piano or organ, commencing July 30th, 1883, and continuing ten weeks. Classes will be organized at Aaronsburg, Millheim and vicinities. Arrangements have been made at Aaronsburg to accommodate pupils from a distance who are desirous of receiving musical instructions. Aaronsburg,

—Our Mifflinburg friends held a meeting one evening last week to make arrangements for a grand Harvest Home Basket Picnic to be held near that place, Thursday, August 23rd. Judging from the formidable array of committees it is to be a big affair, but what pleases us most is the following item in the proceedings:

"Also moved and carried that the Secretary be instructed to add names of persons from Centre county to the committee of arrangements that may be given him."

This indicates plainly that Centre county will be invited to take part in the great thanksgiving feast, and we assure our brethern down the road that their kind feelings will be fully reciprocated.

—The following sensible item from an exchange expresses our sentiments exactly:

We are willing to give place in our local columns to mention of any visitors, the absence of any citizen, his wife or his daughter, but at the same time we would be glad to have the item written out and handed in, or mention made of it at this office. People are always much interested in knowing the absence of friends, and equally glad to know the presence of any visitor upon whom they wish to call. Some very sensible people say they don't want their names in the papers. This may be true as to a puff or bit of evident flattery; but it can hardly be true of the simple announcement of a visitor's name or the temporary absence of a gentleman or lady. So bring in the items, we are always glad to get them. No visitor is more welcome to our sanctum than one who brings in an item.

—A special from Lewistown to the Harrisburg Patriot states that on Monday morning Samuel Longwell killed Reed Alexander, near Milroy. From points gleaned it appears that Alexander asked Mr. Longwell, sr., the owner of the farm, for the privilege of picking a bucket of raspberries off the bushes on the land. Permission was granted him. It happened that the farm was tenanted by his son, Samuel Longwell. He was not aware of the favor granted Alexander and when he saw him with his bucket he at once ordered him off the place. Alexander refused to obey. Sharp language was used between them when Longwell picked up a piece of fence rail and struck Alexander across the head. He fell to the ground and Longwell fled. The injured man was discovered by another gentleman to whom he was just able to tell who his assailant was. A few moments later he died.

The murderer was arrested and is confined in the Lewistown jail. Both men have families.

What a terrible tragedy! One man murdered, another sitting in jail awaiting trial for murder, and two families made utterly miserable—and all for a few berries!

LETTER FORM COLORADO.

Leadville, Col., July 10th, 1883

Editor Journal:—

I came to Leadville a few days ago from Denver, via the Denver & RioGrand R. R., up the Arkansas River The scenery through the canon is truly grand. The waters come rolling and tumbling down over the rocks at a rate terrible to behold, and the walls of solid rock, alomst perpendicular, and from two to three thousand feet high, make a fellow 's head swim to look at. The snow cap ped mountain peaks are almost continually in sight and afford a novel and grand view to an eastern man.

Leadville has lost much of its former business and population, but it is still considered a good town. It is 260 miles from Denver City. I went to see Thomas Weaver and Thomas Motz, who are engaged in the prop timber business for the mines. I went with them to their lumber camp. We loaded a wagon with props, took our dinner grub, stuck fast in the mud several times, but got through all safe and returned home in the evening all O. K.

Philip Weaver returned from his trip to Twin Lakes. He is in the trout business and gets 50 cents a pound for the speckled beauties here in Leadville. Philip is an old boss at the business and does well. He is here since 1866, when he crossed overland from Denver, in ox teams, in company with Mr. Geo. P. Weaver, a Mr. Daugherty from Lebenon, Pa., and my departed sister Lydia.

Prices are very high here, excepting dry goods, which are comparatively reasonable. A laborer gets $3 a day and must pay $1 for board. A two-horse team earns $6 a day. Provisions must all be brought here by rail and are of course high. Good heavy horses sell for $500 to $800. There is much hauling done here. I am told that a four-horse team hauled from the mine to the smelting furnace nearly nine tons of ore, at one load. What do our Penn's Valley farmers think of such loads?

To-morrow I expect to leave Leadville for Twin Lakes to visit Mr. Weaver and spend a day with him catching trout. If I can't catch any I know that he can, and you bet I will help to eat them.

There are plenty of chances here to buy interests in mines. These offers are generally from prospectors who have no means to develope their claims and are seeking partners to aid them. Facilities for mining and hauling are increasing, and many of the mines are now considered paying which formerly were worth but little, if anything. The costs of reducing raw ore has come down considerable and will still get lower. Hauling, labor and everything else will get lower in course of time, so that many hundreds of tons of ore may in future become valuable that are now worthless. I am of the opinion that there is a vast wealth buried in these Rocky Mountains that may never be exhausted, but will feed and suport millions of population for generations to come. More anon

Truly Yours,

J. C. MOTZ.

The Next State Fair.

Secretary D. W. Seiler and Major Elbridge McConkey, of the State Agricultural Society, have returned home from Philadelphia where they had been making arrangements for the next annual exhibition of the State Fair. Thirty acres of ground have been secured at Broad street and Germantown junctions, a lease being made for ten years from Mr. Weightman, of the firm of Powers & Weightman. The officers will immediately fence in the ground and rapidly put up substantial buildings. For exhibits a building 1,000 feet long and 75 feet wide will be erected, besides stalls for cattle, horses, sheep, swine and poultry and other sheds. The premium list this year will be very liberal.

Roses from Cuttings.

European horticulturists sometimes adopt this mode of planting rose cuttings so as to root with more certainty. They bend the shoot and insert both ends in the ground, leaving a single bud uncovered at the middle and on the surface of the ground. The cuttings are about ten inches long, and are bent over a stick laid flat on the ground, holes being dug on each side of the stick for the reception of the ends of the shoot. The roots form only at the lower end of the shoot, but the other end being buried, prevents evaporation and drying up. A correspondent of the London Garden says that he has tried this, along with the old mode, and that, while the weaker cutting of the latter have shown symptoms of dying and failure, all the former have grown vigorously.

Parsnips for Animals.

When mixed with hay and other dry feed, parsnips are valuable for horses and cows, the feeding being commenced gradually, as with roots generally. They possess an important advantage over other roots, in that the crop may be safely left in the ground all winter, as freezing does not injure them when they thaw out in the ground, and thus the labor of late autumn harvesting is avoided. They are easily dug in spring by plowing a furrow close to the row and away from it, and pulling them out by hand—a few bushels being taken out at a time as needed. A quarter of an acre yielded 100 bushels last year on our grounds, or 400 bushels per acre, notwithstanding the extraordinary drouth. As the tops start to grow in spring they are rapidly cut off with sharp hoes, and thus the roots are kept for feeding for several weeks—Country Gentleman.

Fruit Culture.

The annual report on "Fruit Culture" issued by the Michigan State Horticultural Society, contains results of the experience of its members and many practical directions. A member who advocates summer pruning of small fruits applies it to the strawberry by keeping the runners cut, by which crown upon crown is added and the size and the productiveness of the fruit increased. He applies it to raspberries and blackberries by pinching back, to concentrate the bearing wood and admit free passage between rows for cultivation and gathering the crop. Black caps require, in his opinion, more pinching than red raspberries, and early thinning, the leaves secures well-ripened wood. Thinning in time will make weak-growing sorts strong.

Thinning the peach crop is generally recommended. Some growers thin out one half to two-thirds of the fruit on loaded trees, leaving the peaches several inches apart. Some do not thin until early in July, others do it early in June or before the pits harden, as that is believed to be the process which exhausts the trees.

Professor Beal, on the subject of cross-fertilization, says that crossing strawberries is easily accomplished; all that is necessary is to plant two sorts together. But grapes fertilize before the flowers open, hence the covering must be removed and the stamens be carefully cut away and a paper bag be placed over the flowers to prevent any outside pollen from reaching them. The pollen having been previously gathered and secured in a bottle, is applied within a day or two. It is easily gathered for this purpose, whole stamens being cut off and dropped in the bottle. Apples are easily crossed, and are the best fruits for the novice to work on. Cut all the stamens away before the blossom of a cluster, and remove the others. In a day or two touch the five stigmas with the selected pollen. It is easier to effect crosses in glass-houses, in the absence of wind or insects, which often disturb results.

Plowing in green rye for enriching orchards has its advocates, who especially recommend this course in peach orchards. The seed should be sown in August, so as to secure a dense growth before winter. It must be turned under in the spring as soon as the heads begin to apppear. A single crop is insufficient, the green manuring should be continued year after year.

Household Hints.

The water used in mixing bread must be tepid. If it is too hot the loaves will be full of holes.

To make a clothes line pliable—Boil it an hour or two before using it. Let it dry in a warm room and do not allow it to "kink."

To boil potatoes so that the will be dry and mealy—When the skins break, pour off the water and let them finish cooking in their own steam.

To remove starch or rust from flat-irons—Have a piece of yellow beeswax tied in a coarse cloth; when the iron is almost hot enough to use, but not quite, rub it quickly with the beeswax and then with a clean coarse cloth.

It is not generally known that mint sauce will keep if bottled, and be as good or even better than when freshly gathered. Of course I do not mean that it will keep indefinitely, but for a week or ten days at least. This will will be good news to the family to whom it is not alone the first swallow but the first mint-sauce which makes the summer.—New York Evening Post.

Venom of Serpents.

A remarkable discovery in toxicology, the science of poisons, has recently been made in this city by Drs. S. Weir Mitchell and Edward T. Reichert. These gentlemen have for some time past been conducting an elaborate study of the venoms of almost all American serpents, the bites of which are poisonous, as well as many foreign ones, and the recent report is made up from selections from their notes. Up to this time all observers have regarded the venoms as representing a single poison, but the researches of Dr. Mitchell and Dr. Reichert go to show that many of them contain two and several separate poisons.

The venoms especially mentioned are those of the rattlesnake, the moccasin, and the copperhead, which were obtained in a fresh state, in which they are all in the form of a slightly turbid, yellowish fluid. Dried cobra venom was also produced from Calcutta, India. It was found that in drying the venoms about seventy-five per cent of their weight was lost, and that in a state of aqueous solution all the properties of the fresh venom were preserved, except that the intensity of the poison was slightly diminished.

The reports show that the venom of the moccasin snake contains three proteides—one analogous to peptones, and a putrefacient; one akin to globulines, and a much more fatal poison, probably attacking the respiratory centers, and destroying the power of the blood to clot, and a third resembling the albumens. The external symptoms caused in animals by the several venoms—cobra, rattlesnake, moccasin, or copperhead—do not differ radically, save in degree. In all alike, there is some primary heart disturbance, temporarily lowered blood pressure, fatal enfeeblement of the respiratory centers and local effusion of blood with lessening or loss of its power to clot. These atter symptoms are best seen when the animal experimented upon survives for some hours, or a day, and then, also, is noticable the breaking down of the capillaries and the tendency to local putresence and gangrene. Cobra venom is proved to be the most intense in its poisonous power, the venom of the copperhead next, then the moccasin and rattlesnake. The investigations in this line are as yet far from complete, and accordingly these facts are not asserted as being final or at all conclusive.—Philadelphia Record.

The Howling Monkey.

The howling monkeys are the largest found in America, and are celebrated for the loud voice of the males. Often in the great forests of the Amazon, or Orinoco, a tremendous noise is heard in the night or early morning, as if a great assemblage of wild beasts were all roaring and screaming together.

The noise may be heard for miles, and it is louder and more piercing than of any other animals, yet it is all produced by a single male howler sitting on the branches of a lofty tree. They are enabled to make this extraordinary noise by means of an organ that is possessed by no other animal. The lower jaw is unusually deep, and this makes room for a hollow, bony vessel about the size of a large walnut, situated under the roof of the tongue, and having an opening in the windpipe by which the animal can force air into it. This increases the power of its voice, acting something like the hollow case of a violin and producing those marvelous rolling and reverberating sounds which caused the celebrated traveller Waterton to declare that they were such as might have had their origin in the infernal regions. The howlers are large and stout-bodied monkeys with bearded faces, and very strong and powerful grasping tails. They inhabit the wildest forests; they are very shy, and are seldom taken captive though they are less active than many other American monkeys.

The Ear.

Perhaps the most acceptable theory to-day is the one which places the origen of the trouble in the inner ear. The ear consists of three parts: the outer of these runs in as far as the drum; the middle part is the inside of the drum, and contains the chain of earbones; while the inner ear is a complicated affair, containing the essential organ of hearing.

As far as we are concerned, the inner ear is a membranous bag filled with fluid, and situated in the solid bone. From the back part of this bag run out three semicircular tubes communicating at both ends with the bag or vestibule. These run in three different planes, and are lined with hair-like nerve-filaments, which are much more numerous and sensitive at the anterior part of the tubes. The tubes are filled with liquid in which float little calcarious particles, the otoliths. These tubes are known as the semicircular canals. It was difficult to see what connection with the sense of hearing these canals could posssbly have, and some time ago it was noticed that injuries to these impaired the sense of hearing in no way, but caused most curious effects in the loss of the equilibrium.—Popular Science Monthly.

For Twenty-Five Years.

Even before the war Hon. Kenneth Rayner, Solicitor of the Treasury, wrote: "I have found it to be a most capital remedy in bowel affections. It has acquired an extensive popularity, so much so as to have become a regular family medicine." For a quarter of a century, with the most astounding results, Dr. Worthington's Cholera and Diarrhœa Medicine has been a standard cure for Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera, Cramps, and Pains of the Stomach and Bowels, Dyspepsia, Sick Stomach, Indigestion, Summer Complaint, Colic, etc. Dr. Levi S. Yates, of North Carolina, also endorses it. Sold for 25 and 50 cents a bottle by druggists and dealers.

ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs;—therefore use the great anti-scrofula, or blood-purifier and strength-restorer,—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to Cod Liver Oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's pamphlet on Consumption, send two stamps to WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Shout the Glad Tidings."

Mrs. THOMAS ATKINSON, of No. 29 Ring Street, Providence, R. I., joins the exultant multitude in glad praise and thanksgiving. Mrs. A. says:

"A few months ago I was taken seriously ill and obliged to give up my accustomed household duties, and receive medical treatment, and grew worse continually until I was confined to my bed, in spite of the doctor's prescriptions and the best advice that I could get. My sufferings were very severe from the excruciating pains in my back, and my legs were very badly swollen, attended with severe pains, which were supposed to be caused by the rheumatism. A friend of mine who called to see me urged me to try Hunt's Remedy, stating that he knew of the wonderful cures of several parties who had taken this medicine, in cases which seemed very much like mine, excepting that they were in much worse condition than I was. I consented to try the Remedy, and begun to take it as directed, and before I had finished taking one bottle the improvement in me was great, and it continued constantly, so that after I had taken less than three bottles I was able to resume my household duties and do my work easily, although I had been confined to the bed several weeks. The swelling of my limbs has disappeared, and the lameness and pains in my back are gone, all gone. For all of which, under the blessing of a kind Providence, I am indebted to Hunt's Remedy, and I believe that it is my duty and privilege to inform all who are suffering in like manner of the remarkable curative and restorative powers of this remedy, which I cheerfully recommend to all who are afflicted with Kidney Disease and Dropsy."

"Never Known to Fail."

This motto was adopted some years ago for the wonderful Kidney medicine, Hunt's Remedy. It was a bold banner to carry, for Hunt's Remedy is recommended for some of the most fatal maladies—Bright's disease and all kidney, bladder, liver and urinary complaints. Hunt's Remedy, the great kidney and liver medicine, is indeed a positive cure, and really is "never known to fail."

A NOTED BUT UNTITLED WOMAN.

[From the Boston Globe.]

Messrs. Editors:—

The above is a good likeness of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., who above all other human beings may be truthfully called the "Dear Friend of Woman," as some of her correspondents love to call her. She is zealously devoted to her work, which is the outcome of a life-study, and is obliged to keep six lady assistants, to help her answer the large correspondence which daily pours in upon her, each bearing its special burden of suffering, or joy at release from it. Her Vegetable Compound is a medicine for good and not evil purposes. I have personally investigated it and am satisfied of the truth of this.

On account of its proven merits, it is recommended and prescribed by the best physicians in the country. One says: "It works like a charm and saves much pain. It will cure entirely the worst form of falling of the uterus, Leucorrhœa, Irregular and painful Menstruation, all Ovarian Troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Floodings, all Displacements and the consequent spinal weakness, and is especially adapted to the Change of Life."

It permeates every portion of the system, and gives new life and vigor. It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. It will at all times, and under all circumstances, act in harmony with the law that governs the female system.

It costs only $1. per bottle or six for $5., and is sold by druggists. Any advice required as to special cases, and the names of many who have been restored to perfect health by the use of the Vegetable Compound, can be obtained by addressing Mrs. P., with stamp for reply, at her home in Lynn, Mass.

For Kidney Complaint of either sex this compound is unsurpassed as abundant testimonials show.

"Mrs. Pinkham's Liver Pills," says one writer, "are the best in the world for the cure of Constipation, Billousness and Torpidity of the liver. Her Blood Purifier works wonders in its special line and bids fair to equal the Compound in its popularity.

All must respect her as an Angel of Mercy whose sole ambition is to do good to others.
